

Manuka Honey

Busy Bees have pantries rich in natural profits.

“I don’t believe I have earned so much, for so little, for something that was so enjoyable to do”

“Delicious for Your Skin”

Manuka Honey has an osmotic effect that draws impurities out of clogged pores. It’s non Hydrogen Peroxide properties help to clear blemishes. Redness is eliminated leaving your skin clean and smooth”

Honey is nature’s untapped treasure trove of nourishing, health-giving substances. The bees that produce it have baffled scientists for centuries. Science can tell you the composition of honey but they have never been able to copy the real thing exactly. One of the leaders in the honey research field, Peter Molan, Professor of Biochemistry at the University of Waikato Honey Research unit in New Zealand, has been researching Manuka Honey for over 19 years and is confirming the belief that honey is highly effective to fight infection and bacteria.

So how is Manuka Honey different?

It is well documented that all natural pure honeys have the ability to aid healing, due to their hydrogen peroxide content, often after exposure to heat, moisture and contamination these peroxide levels can drop until the healing properties disappear. Manuka (Leptospermum Scoparium) is the name of the shrub belonging to the Tea Tree family, and it is different to other Tea Tree honeys. “Certified Active Manuka Honey” (and its Australian equivalent Leptospermum Polygalifolium) is the only honey available for sale that is tested for its antibacterial activity. It contains an additional antibacterial component found only in honey produced from Leptospermum plants, which has been called the “Unique Manuka Factor” (UMF); there is evidence that the two antibacterial components may have a synergistic action.

CResults Manuka Honey products could have been released in the retail industry and would have been recognized as a top shelf skincare range, because health and wellbeing is the consumers perception of “natural is good for us”. But the Manuka Honey story is too good to miss, so we decided MLM was the best way to reach as many people as possible and spread the word about this remarkable ingredient. We believe everybody has the right to have beautiful, healthy skin and it shouldn’t be complicated or expensive and the product should work for the whole family.
